The core evolution to this new “HyperMotion” technology is that it provides players with the most accurate first person perception when controlling the ball in FIFA 22. Players will not have to rely on vision any longer, and can quickly and accurately execute the ball into the far reaches of the pitch. Watch on YouTube Players are given the highest amount of control possible over the ball at all times, and will make the movements they would have in real life. Additional tweaks that enhance the ball motion – including improved ball physics, longer kicks, more realistic spin and roll and an overall increase in ball speed – will make every touch feel more realistic. Players can be found controlling any type of ball that is loose on the pitch, with their controller and body parts similar to how they would handle the ball in real life. Players will be able to move the ball with some basic body movements, such as dodging, reversing direction and controlling it through mid-air. One of the most important elements that has allowed FIFA 18 to stand out from the crowd is its increased player intelligence and the unique connection between players and their squad. This is something that has been built around the core gameplay of FIFA and is something that will carry forward to FIFA 22. The core gameplay of FIFA has always revolved around the intelligence and intuition of the players. When making a decision, players are able to decide based on factors that are important to them. The choice can be influenced by where the player is positioned, the pressure he or she is under, how well-supported he or she is by the team, his or her surrounding teammates and defenders, and the quality of the pass. The way a player makes decisions will naturally vary from one player to another, but will also be affected by one’s formation and how the team plays. All of these internal factors will be represented by the players through their unique physique and movement. In FIFA 22, players will have an “Intelligence Gauge” that is influenced by the player’s form, condition and playstyle. The Intelligence Gauge will show the player’s mental state, and if he or she has been weakened by a knock or injury. If players have been affected by an injury or knock, they will move slower, be less physical and react slower to the ball. If the Intelligence Gauge is topped up with vitamins, players will have their reaction time speed up and

A 10-year-old boy who attends Brookfield Elementary School in Brookfield Wisconsin was told that it was now ok to play with a water gun, after some other children took exception to him using his water gun for his own entertainment. From the Brookfield Middleton Patch: Six-year-old Callan Hoehn was playing with a water gun Wednesday at the Riverside Park playground. When a group of students gathered to watch a video game, the boy, instead, used the water gun on one of the students, according to his mother. The Brookfield Middleton School District believes the student's actions were the actions of a bully. The incident has been reported to the child's parents, and the boy is no longer allowed to come to school. Prairie Grove Schools Superintendent Jodi Paup informed parents Wednesday that there will be sensitivity training for staff members and school administrators, but she will not require any disciplinary action at this time. There has been a tremendous backlash, with a facebook page being created, and parents calling for the boy to be expelled. It seems that the school district has taken a more stand-your-ground approach, and has reported the matter to the parents, and will not be imposing disciplinary action. This is a mistake. The ability to discipline your child should be the parents first-refuge in maintaining order in the classroom. The school officials are not the ones whose opinion is worth most when it comes to the ordering of the youth in their care. If the parents want
