The Ontario English Catholic Teachers' Association came out Thursday morning with its latest bargaining update after the board responded to the minister's letter of last week, in which Lecce said the government would not budge on its bargaining demands and was "not afraid" to lock out teachers. Education Minister Stephen Lecce had promised to present a wide-ranging offer to the Ontario English Catholic Teachers' Association (OECTA) on Thursday. But when he did not, an exasperated teachers' leader launched an impassioned letter of her own, calling the government out for "mincing words." "In the face of our rejection, you have opted to play the blame game," Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation president Michael Williams wrote in a letter to Lecce. "In our view, this is a game of elementary importance that you have chosen to play. It has caused a great deal of uncertainty in the many hundreds of thousands of students whose learning will be affected by any disruption of school," Williams said in the letter. The government has negotiated the association's contract since 2015 under the previous government of Kathleen Wynne, and it calls for mandatory work-to-rule from the first day of a school year to the last, with a five
