When performing the oral administrations, one must be careful not to touch the tongue, or to touch any other parts of the mouth, lips, or gums with the needle. If the oral administration is given to the tongue, then the needle should be directed into the lingual region to avoid damage to the tongue. In some patients the damage to the tongue may be severe so other delivery methods should be considered. If the drug is not tolerated when administered orally, then a vein or subcutaneous route should be tried. Note: If hypertension, hyperlipidemia, or type 2 diabetes mellitus is present, treatment with oral antidiabetes medications is recommended (type or doses vary per class). Note: For patient with heart failure and ejection fraction \ c6a93da74d
