physician and.[Relationship between health status and occupational activity among population of Uzbekistan in 2005]. The article deals with the results of study on the occupational activity of the population aged from 15 to 64 years and living in the cities of Uzbekistan in 2005. It is shown that the proportion of inactive population increased. The activity of population has decreased on an average in all spheres (agricultural, domestic and industrial) except in industry, where there has been a decrease in industrial activity (in the direction of more active forms of labor, the dynamics is 5.6%) and an increase in the proportion of inactive population. As for the senior population (the elderly), there is a gradual increase of the inactive population (in all spheres, by 4% on average). The indicators of household living conditions, long-term savings, unmet health care and morbidity rates are analyzed by region, region of residence and primary occupation. There is a significant increase in the morbidity rates in the population of certain regions. The authors come to the conclusion that the indicators of the health status of the population have been lower than the average indicators for the population of Russia as a whole.
